GRADIENTS AND COLOURS

Our brand colours and gradients are directly inspired by our cans. We pull from their unique vibrancy to create a unified look across all our communications.

As our flavour portfolio evolves, so will our colour palette, adding even more depth and dimension to our communications.

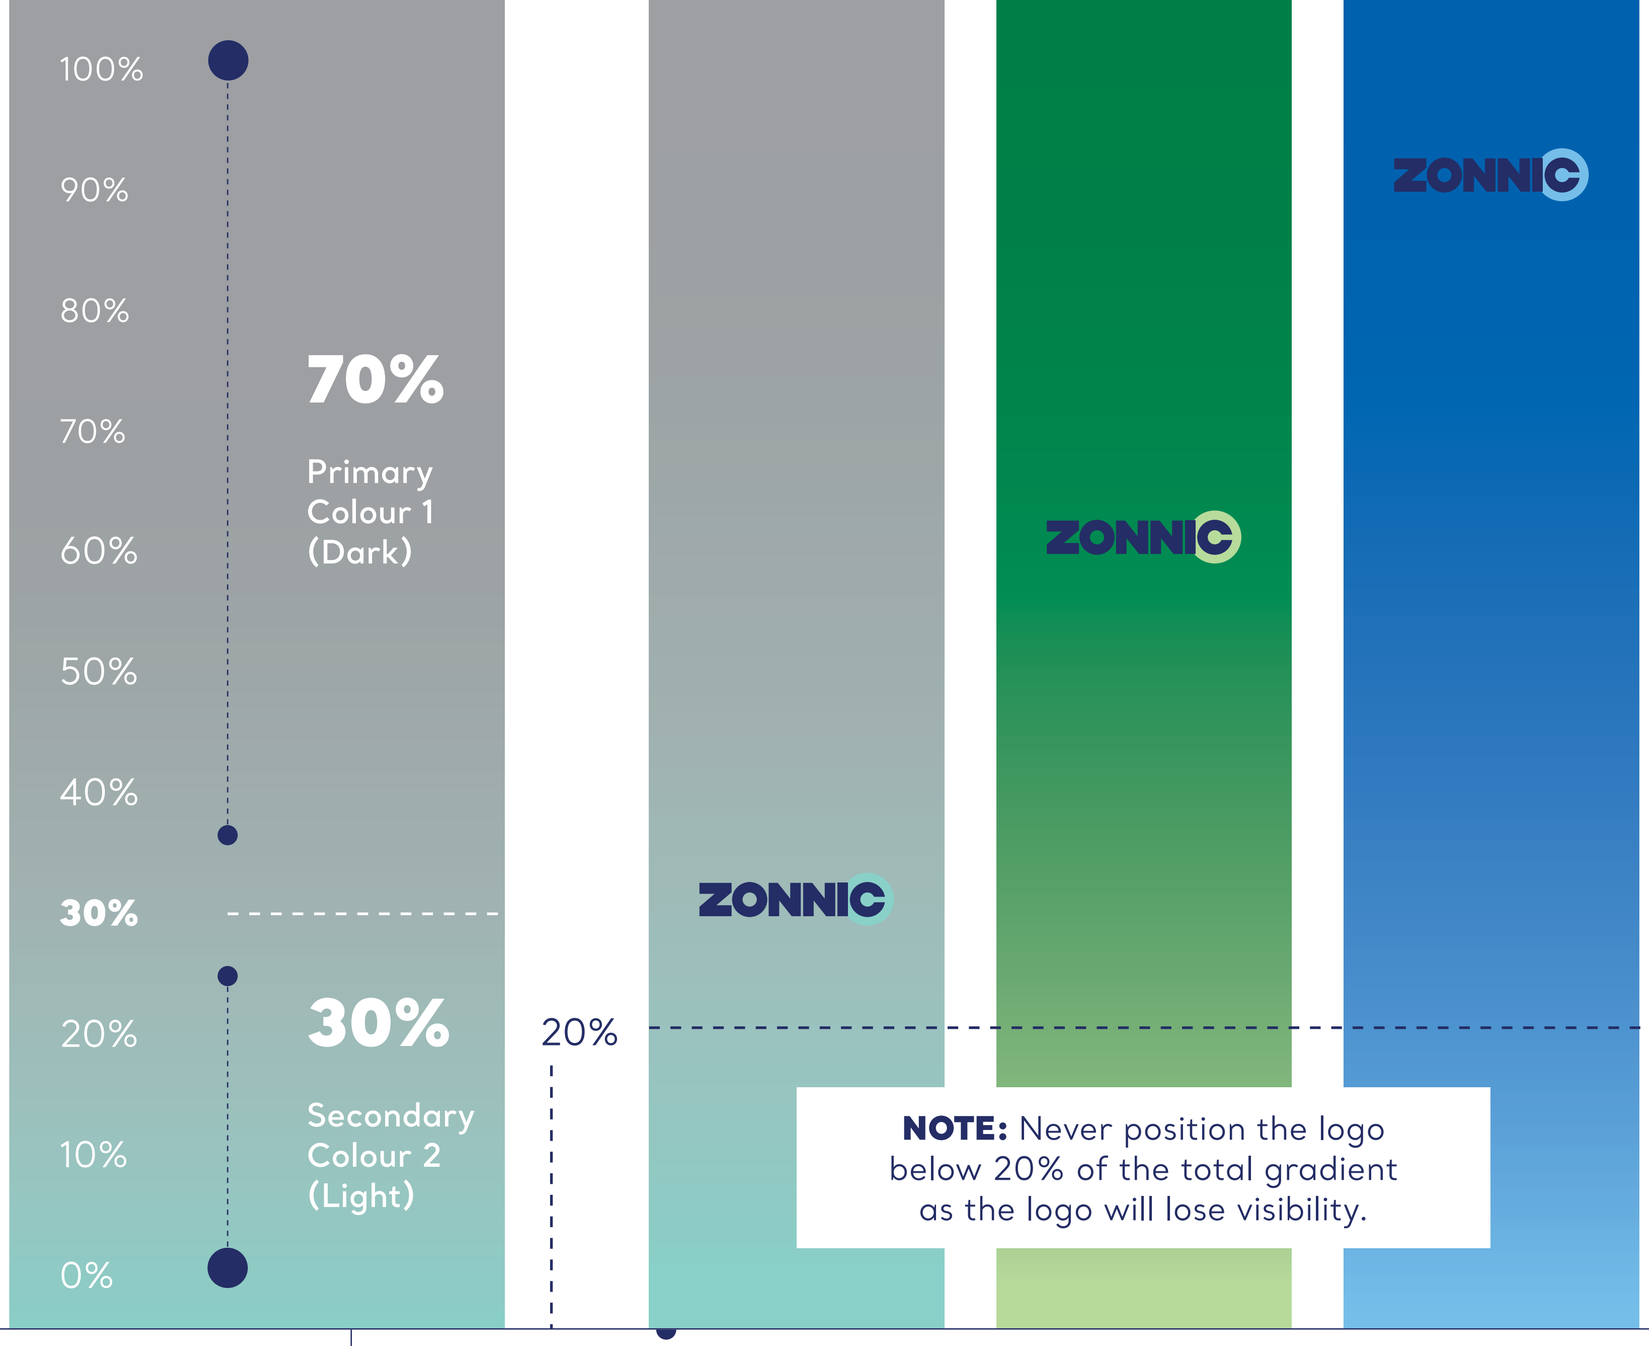
GRADIENT AND COLOUR SPLIT

Gradient direction and distribution are essential to the brand identity, so the 70% and 30% colour balance must always be respected.

The primary flavour colour should always start at the top and fade vertically, followed by the secondary colour at the bottom.



NOTE: Never position the logo below 20% of the total gradient as the logo will lose visibility.

GREY GRADIENT

Our signature grey background is created from an image. This allows the flexibility to stretch the image to have the gradient fit the content in their respective touchpoint.

APPLYING BRAND COLOURS ACROSS APPLICATIONS

PRINCIPLES

- Use the primary colour from the gradient (1) as the main visual cue for navigating the portfolio.
- The secondary colour (2) should primarily appear on the side label halo "C" in packaging. It can also be used in bespoke activations when paired with a primary white execution and accented with colour (2).
- For flavour-led assets, use either the primary colour (1) or the full gradient (1 & 2) to clearly communicate the flavour profile.

ASSETS IN PRACTICE: THE DO's

Flavour related content: Utilize primary colour or full gradient.
Educational content: Leverage the grey background and secondary colours in a purposeful manner.

In bespoke activations and as highlights, the secondary colour can be used as an accent shade.

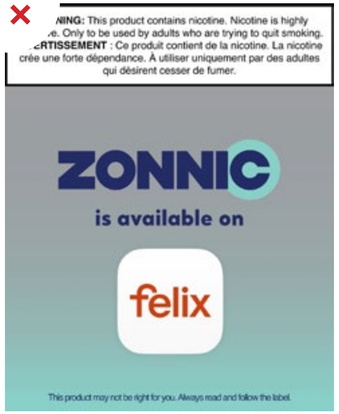
Flavour-led visual with gradient background (1 & 2) & incorporating flavour elements.

Brand purpose on grey & white background, properly laid out.

ASSETS IN PRACTICE: THE DON'T's

Flavour related content: Utilize primary colour or full gradient.
Educational content: Leverage the grey background and secondary colours in a purposeful manner.

These don't work because, first, we're not speaking directly to flavours, and second, we're using the secondary colour as a full background rather than as an accent.



Using the gradient in a non-flavour-led visual. Should be on the grey background.

Grey gradient background does not follow the guideline.

Solid white background is off-brand. In this case it should be a primary colour (1) or gradient (1 & 2) since this a flavour-led visual.
